

Two Decades of Impact

Dave Morris, WRFI Instructor

"I've worked with students outdoors for most of my life, and most of that time has been with WRFI. I will occasionally get pulled aside by other interests and jobs, but I always come back to the vital energies I find here. Teaching courses is a tremendous amount of work alongside the lovely bits of sunsets and laughs around the camp-kitchen. Despite the work, you rarely know for sure that you have really made a difference in student lives or to crucial issues.

But I have always been sure that this work is pulling in the correct direction. That is: helping excited, informed, and engaged people at the start of their lives move toward their potential to benefit the world. A WRFI course is a trickle of experience that can cascade into wider and stronger channels of engagement with the world that last a lifetime. I've seen it happen and it gives me goosebumps. It keeps me going."

Dave Morris has been an Instructor since 2001, served on the Board for six years, and has managed all WRFI field programs from the office. He has co-created several WRFI courses through the year.
